La monarchie

La monarchie thaïlandaise possède les lois "lèse-majesté" les plus strictes au monde.

En anglais :

Frank discussion of the royal succession and palace scandals is illegal in Thailand, where a draconian lèse majesté law punishes any perceived criticism of the monarchy with three to 15 years in jail. The law has been increasingly harshly enforced in recent years as the succession draws closer, and scores of people have been arrested since the military seized power in a coup last May.

- Article 112 of Thailand's criminal code which says anyone who "defames, insults or threatens the king, the queen, the heir-apparent or the regent" will be punished with up to 15 years in prison.

Culture:

Each day has its colour in Thailand:

Monday = Yellow (day of birth of the king, this explains the number of yellow flags and Thai people with yellow shirts on any given day, especially on Mondays)

Tuesday = Pink

Wednesday = Green

Thursday = Orange

Friday = Blue (day of birth of the queen, this explains the number of blue flags you may come across)

Saturday = Purple

Sunday = Red
